A SEACOR Company

The modern day business premises are often at the centre of most, if not all, of the key business activities. The risks to that building are ever increasing in what can, at best, be described as an unstable world. When an unplanned event occurs, the speed and effectiveness of the first responders has been proven to be critical for the protection of people and to the longer term recovery of the business.

This one day course develops the skills and techniques of those assigned with responding to the initial event. It combines theoretical and practical training including presentations, workshops and practical exercises which address issues such as communications, effective evacuation, dynamic risk assessment and invocation.

This course is aimed at 'first responder' groups within an office location - Office Managers, Facilities, Security staff, Fire Marshals - who are potentially responsible for initiating a response to a buildings related event. The training could be imperative for the future survivability of your business.

The following modules make up the training:

- Essential roles of the Location Incident Manager
- How to pass information onto the management response team
- Requirements of an Emergency Response Organisation
- Interfacing with Emergency Services
- Essentials of Emergency Communications
- Fundamentals of Dynamic Risk Assessment
- Leadership techniques for Emergency situations
- Management of Stress
- Overview of Media Handling in an Emergency

The participants will also undoubtedly gain some unique team building experience through the interaction with others in a series of realistic simulation exercises.
